INTRODUCTION

In ancient Dutch textbooks there was a very nice story about a young man from Harlem, Laurens Coster, who went with his girl friend to the country. To give expression to his love for her he carved in the trunk of a tree the initial letters of both their names. The letter L fell from the tree into the loose earth. Laurens Coster absorbed in thought, considered the possibility of doing the same thing with ink. Thus, the art of printing is said to have been invented. This is what we were taught in our schools.

The Indians have left us their inscriptions, but we do not know the key to the alphabet of their strange signs.

The Spaniards brought to our island Americo Vespuchi who wrote the story of these "Giants" and this book on Curaçao and the other islands became so popular that this continent is called after him.

The priests brought books from their motherland - books of liturgy, sermons, asceticism, as "Guides for sinners".

Ampués founds a peaceful colony on the island of Curaçao and here his son-in-law Bejerano reads works by Erasmus. The poet Castellanos comes to see him and writes many poems on the paradise, called Curaçao. The pirates arrive and with them Stuyvesant who is also a poet. Then it's the jews' turn, you know them from Rembrandt. They come from dark Holland to bright Curaçao, with their bible of course and possibly with their Spinoza. They live to enjoy life. There were no big libraries. In the 18th century a governor sends a letter to the leaders of the West Indian Company thanking them for having presented him with the fifth volume of the Code but at the same time he informs them that he does not possess the first four volumes either.

There were political pamphlets in circulation, attacking the governors, the system, the books by Raynal, the encyclopaedists. At the beginning of the 19th century the first newspaper is published which is to be the precursor of an endless series of other papers. It seems to be a personal ambition.

Schools arise, taking excellent names of "colleges" and also publishing firms like "De Curaçaosche Courant" the oldest of Curaçao and that of Agustín Bethancourt and Sons, give a great reputation to our island in foreign countries, especially those of South America. Curaçao becomes the cultural centre from which the book finds its way to many Spanish speaking countries. Venezuela, Colombia, Cuba, Mexico, Chile, Argentina and other countries have for many years been dependent on Curaçao for their books and other printed matter. They were publications which to-day, many years later, fill us with admiration. All kinds of books, from musical notations up to novels, scientific essays, weekly chronicles and monthly magazines, collections of poems and reprints, opened a channel from our island to the people of the American continent to whom, speaking from the cultural point of view, these islands north of the Venezuelan coast could be called an oasis.

For many years Curaçao has been the centre of diffusion of culture and knowledge. Curaçao owes the books a great deal of gratitude. The book itself, as far as its realization and its diffusion in South America is concerned owes Curaçao much gratitude. As the history of our island shows the book served as the link between the countries and as a memorial stone. Not only have we received much from our neighbours, but we have also given. Spanish is in.

The first apostolic vicar Monseigneur Niewindt publishes the first book in papiamento in 1826. His purpose was to reach the whole population by using their own language. Later, books in Dutch, English, and other languages flow into the island. Libraries are founded. A public library, and a scientific library. Both in development.

Now, on the eve of our independence we contemplate with great pleasure and satisfaction the fact that you who are richly experienced professionals would be able to teach us how to arrange things so that the culture of yesterday may be preserved in the archives and we may be able to refer to them in the libraries, so that the documentalist may be able to keep pace with today's pulse of life.

Welcome friends of the book. We shall not only learn from you how to choose the appropriate paper, how to select the records, and how to eliminate white ants. In our turn we shall be very glad to set you an example of how to build up something in complete freedom.

In the difficult periods of their lives Simon Bolivar, Francisco de Miranda, Martí de Cuba, Irving de Puerto Rico and also the French who fled from the guillotine stayed here in complete freedom and felt at home.

May mutual understanding in freedom guide you.
